left for New York last Friday to engage miners for the Pilot Knob Mines. Joseph Price went to St. Joe Lead Mines for the purpose of hiring laborers for the mines.

The horster is in full operation in the rock drift, and is hoisting ore out of the incline at that part of the mine. Ed. Perry, the wood-butcher, has a new helper in place of the Italian helper who has gone into the mines to work.

The lightning boss can't control the lightning that is needed to light up the mines. He had a new machine sent in place of the old one, and it appears that it won't manufacture the lightning for the boss so that the mines can be lighted up with satisfaction. Here is a new generator that is supposed to carry lightning enough to light up or run sixty lamps. This new machine was put in operation with a speed for sixty lamps, when at the same time (as I have been informed) there were not over thirty lamps in operation. The result, of course, was the burning of some parts of the generator. J. C. Simpson, General Manager, was the mines several days last week. The company has sold the ore dump

No. 2 and commenced shipping last Satur-Several new Rand drilling machines were started last week. Ore is being shipped daily to the Vulcan Steel Works at Carondelet.

The Company's store at this place is filled with every thing the workmen need in the line of dry goods, groceries, provisions, visits this store will find Mr. Post at his post. The late striking miners have been notified to vacate the Company houses within the next thirty days.

One year ago the mines ceased operations and the prediction with a great many was that the mines would not work again for years, on account of the dullness in the iron business. Also, that the South could produce cheaper ores and cheaper iron than could be produced in Missouri. The above prediction has not proved to be true, as far as Pilot Knob mines are concerned, for today the mines are shipping large quantities of ore, and have secured large ore confracts that will take some time to fill. And there is no doubt that all this work and energy in bringing the mines into their present condition is due to the energy of Receiver Hitchcock and General Manager J. C. Simpson; and to-day our little Valley rings with the blasts from our iron mines.

IRONTON, Mo., August 12th, 1885. a short distance, I have concluded to give you a partial description of "the big blast." For several months Messrs. Schneider and Wright have had men engaged in their granite quarry, two miles west of Middlebrook, in Iron county, placing machinery in position, building houses, and sinking a shaft near the base of their granite mountain.

The shaft was carried down about fifty feet, by Messrs. Schleuter and Albert Stone, contractors; also, two wings or chambers, running in opposite directions for a considerable distance. The chambers were filled with several tons of powder, and closed with solid granite, as also was the shaft, leaving only a bucket of cold water into the wagon, thereroom enough for two small wires to pass out. Everything being in readiness, Saturday, at one o'clock, was the time selected for the explosion. Notices were posted in many places around the works, warning the people to keep in safe places, for fear of an accident.

We reached Fredericktown at four o'clock P. M. The town was rather dull. Met several friends and acquaintances; after looking around awhile, we moved on three or four miles eastward, and camped in a grove near a large spring. Our Nimrod shot three rabbits, which the cook prepared, with other things, for supper, which we enjoyed immensely. It's strange how hungry one will get! After supper awhile, we turned into our bunks, three of the boys sleeping in the wagon, the other under it. In the wee, sma' hours, when spirits are said to be abroad, an evil one entered the heart of the sleeper on the ground, causing him to throw by stirring up a turmoil among the sleepers. After a time, peace and quiet was restored. Morning came, and our cook made a corndodger for breakfast. I will refer you to the boys as to its quality.

We cross two sloughs of the Mississippi, which are spanned; by iron bridges two hundred yards long. Between the road and the river lies an eigth-thousand-acre cornfield, all under one fence; the corn is immense, too. To the left is a bluff, partly covered with ivy, projecting over the road. This road was the most pleasant one in our trip. Arrived at Ste. Genevieve at 4 P.M. Took a look over the town, and must say it is about the dullest I was ever in. We had an invitation to stay a day or two, but pulled out in a little while, and camped about four miles nearer home. Next morning we started for Farmington, and saw some fine farms on the way. Arrived at Farmington in the afternoon, and stopped quite a while looking around. It is the prettiest town we saw after leaving Ironton. But you all know Farmington.
